YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO

FROM an industrial standpoint Youngstown is regarded as second only to Pittsburg among the leading iron and steel centers of the world. While its product deals principally with iron and steel it is by no means confined to them, but enjoys a large diversity of industries.

This city, the metropolis of the Mahoning Valley with a population of 60,000, is within sixty miles of the docks where the output of the inexhaustible mines of the ore regions are located, and within the same distance of the endless coal fields of Pennsylvania and the largest coke ovens in the world. At its very door are thousands of acres of limestone. In the heart of the fields producing the raw material for iron and steel, and in the midst of the markets for the finished materials, its advantages as a manufacturing city are unsurpassed.

Youngstown's manufacturers are prominently identified in the management of the large industrial combines, which recently absorbed many of its industries, and by them its interests are being most satisfactorily cared for. At the dawn of the twentieth century, Youngstown is enjoying an unprecedented boom and what is in store for it none can prophesy with any degree of certainty.

As a place of residence it cannot well be improved upon. Situated in the beautiful and fertile Mahoning valley, on the old Western reserve; watered by an inexhaustible stream from which the valley derives its name; including within its range rich agricultural fields and well developed farms; above the standard in its sanitary construction; connected by the outside world with five large trunk line railroads, its location as a residence and business city is all that could be desired.
